British Liberals Insist on Law to Prevent Dismemberment of Northern Ireland

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Aug. 24 — Week-end onferences between the Irish enders and the British Gov. leaders and the British of the ernment began at the Colonial Office here this morning. Those taking part included W. T. Cosgrave, who part included W. T. Cosgrave, who worning from part included W. T. Cosgrave, who arrived early this morning from Dublin, also Lord Londonderry, the Education Minister for Ulster, and Colonel Spender, Secretary to the Cabinet for Northern Ireland, who me here yesterday to represent Sir

James Craig.

Meanwhile, the Ulster Association Meanwhile, the Ulster Association here issued a memorandum replying to Ramsay MacDonald's appeal to Northern Ireland, which was to be "an act of generosity" in the interests of peace by coming forward and appointing a representative upon the boundary commission. Ulster, in this sent, states the it "made great the boundary commission. Usaer, in this reply, states that it "made great sacrifices of territory by giving up three counties—Donegal, Monoghan, and Cavan"—when it accepted the 1920 act. Sir James has repeatedly said it, and adds he is willing "to representative, with a representative, or the sacretic with a representative of the sacretic with a representative. negotiate with a representative of the Free State on a mutual basis."

"A Leap in the Dark" The memorandum goes on to declare that it would be "a leap in the dark" for Ulster to enter on a boundary commission unless the terms of dary commission unless the terms of reference of that body be first de-fined. This point, raised by the Ulster association, of terms of ref-erence of the boundary commission, has become the crux of the situation. The question is whether the boundary commission is to be a bona fide boundary commission or an instrument for disguised annexation of terment for disguised annexation of ter-ritory. The first of these views was taken by Lord Birkenhead and Austen Chamberlain in explaining the treaty to the House of Commons in 1921, and if it could now be ac cepted by the Free State it might afford a way out of the impasse.

It is recognized here, however, that whatever Mr. Cosgrave might personally desire to do, the position of his Government is such that it may be impossible for him to abate the full claim of the South, which is for wide territories now a part of Ulster, including the counties of Fermanagh and Tyrone, where the Romana Catholic element is shown by the last census to predominate. This tract is so large that the Ulster Government holds its cession would amount land as a self-governing entity.

Need for Action Liberal organs here stress the need for immediate action. The Manchester Guardian, for example, declares any deliberate delay on Eng-land's part might make the position of Mr. Cosgrave's Government im-

William M. Butler of Boston, divided almost equally among his many textile mill interests and the national political campaign.

In the morning and until far in the afternoon Mr. Butler sat at directors' meetings of the various cotton mill concerns in which he is interested. Later he held several political conferences with Republican leaders from different parts of the State. The situation here was discussed and some attention was paid to the third party campaign which is to be opened in Massachusetts in a short time.

Mr. Butler was averse to talking at length for publication. He indicated that reports from all over the United States, however, are reas-suring and that the Coolidge campaign is gathering formidable headway. It was indicated more by in-ference than assertion that Wisconsin and North Dakota are the states where the La Follette movement is really formidable and even in these states the Republicans are making a hard contest and intend to work

FORESTERS ASK "ACRE A YEAR"

Farm Folk Group Adopt State Reforestation Program

AMHERST, Mass., Aug. 2 (Special) To increase Massachusetts' supply of standing timber against probable future lumber shortage, to increase the value of farms as securities for the value of farms as securities for loans, and to afford a cash-returning product to farms burdened with rocky hillside pastures, were the chief purposes of a state-wide forest-planting program adopted at the foresters' session of Farm and Home Week here. A planting campaign slogan, "an acre a year," describes what the foresters expect farmers will undertake. Farm and Home Week which closed yesterday had an attendance average of between 800 and 900 a day. The new features, the feed-dealers' and the foresters' programs proved of interest.

The tree planting campaign is supported by the State Commission of Conservation, the Massachusetts Forestry Association, the Northeastern Forest Experiment Station, eastern Forest Experiment Station the Massachusetts Agricultural Col-lege, and the extension services in nearly all the counties of the State.

to plant at least an acre a year of pine, spruce or other valuable tim-ber seedlings, for several years. Particularly in hill counties where distance makes dairying hazardous, it was thought that poor lands might better be set to pine or spruce. The Berkshire hills would need red pine and spruce, while the eastern part of the State is best adapted to white pine. County Agent Bevan of the Berkshire County Extension Serv-ice stated that the fire hazard in the eastern end of the State was three times that in the western part.

The labor cost of planting an acre is about two days' wages, and the seedlings are to be had at $10 for 1000. They are planted at the rate of 1000 to 1200 an acre. The opinion was expressed that this method of increasing timber resources would prove more effective than public forests.

In the coming winter these organizations mentioned will hold meetings about the State to interest farmers employ a man in each town to distribute young trees, will hold demon-strations in the spring and inspect plantings with tours of farmers next summer. These meetings will in-struct farmers and woodlot owners how to estimate timber, how to cut judiciously, give them a knowledge of the valuable woods to grow, and inform them on lumber markets. The value of properly thinning a pine orchard was stated by S. T. Dana, director of the Forest Experiment Station. A good white pine stand will give an average annual net profit of $5 an acre by being thinned and cleaned and will make better growth for the pruning. Woo lots have been bank accounts for many farmers, and farmers will find profit in tending to the 1,000,000 acres of woodland on Massachusetts farms. A million trees by this method alone is the desired planting if the seedings are available this year. H. O. Cook, chief forester of this State, stated wood cut in Massachu-setts is not paid for at as high rates as it should be. He thinks that

J. V. MacMurray Outlines Nation's Development at Politics Institute

By a Staff Correspondent WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 2— "China is the crux of the Far East. China's present position as a politi-cal entity could hardly be more dis-integrated. China's Government could hardly be more corrupt. And yet nese, and realize the social progress and educational revival, amounting a renaissance taking place there by side with almost complete tical chaos, cannot despair of the Nation. Eventual emergence from the present difficulties will come, but werp MacMurray, chief of the di-vision of Far Eastern affairs of the State Department, and expert adviser at the Washington Conference for the Limitation of Armament.

Armament Issues Discussed The opening of the first Institute round tables was marked also by a statement issued by Rear Admiral W. L. Rodgers, recently retired chairman of the executive commitchairman of the executive commit-tee of the general board of the United ates Navy, and member of the stitute, who declared Great Britain has no legal justification for opposing alteration of gun elevations of ships in the American Navy. Admiral Rodgers in his statement

The treaty allows the retained battleships of all powers to be remodeled within certain limitations. Great Britain has done what she saw fit to modernize her own ships within treaty limits, and now when the United States wants to modernize her ships in her own way (allowed). Great Britain expresses reception and relies on the sentimentality and generosity of the American public say that it shall not do anything to say that it shall not do anything to offend any nation.

We need only stand on our rights and England will scarcely continue to insist upon a point upon which our judgment is just as authoritative as her own.

China's Progress Cited

Mr. MacMurray, reviewing the burse of history in China that has brought about such contrasting con-ditions there in different fields of development declared that on one corrupt to a point where it can hardly go farther, while, on the other hand, social and educational progress is being made in great forward strides.

Unlike the lands of the West, he said, the East has never been poli-tically-minded. In China civilization has never developed so that its citi zens think in political terms. Early in the incredibly remote period of China's unwritten history, an agricultural state developed, with a system of government that proved adequate to deal with the large population and the tremendous territory system was one where laws and regulation were reduced to uplest terms. It lasted virtually om the time of remote antiquity to dozen or so years ago. Mr. Mac-

Murray continued: The state in China is based on the family, which is a governmental factor. The family has been an active and positive conservative force, and has supplied a great deal force, and has supplied a great deal of the machinery of government which the west had to build up by other means. In innumerable regions the village or district is occupied by one family administering civil law. In a hundred civil law cases, the Chinese family would settle 90, the guilds, or superior bodies formed to arbitrate between families, would settle nine, and the state only one.

Uncodified Customs

In this way Chinese customs grew up that have existed for centuries, for every one of the decades of the western common law. Accordingly with the coming of the revolution, China emerged as a Republic with a mass of uncodified customs, but no law in the western sense. China must borrow all its traditions and political machinery customs, but no law in the western sense. China must borrow all its traditions and political machinery from the West, and of those rules of procedure already adopted the ones most hallowed by time are not more than a dozen years old.

The result has been that China, in spite of its long history as a nation, and in spite of its strong racial consciousness, neither possesses nor understands any such legal or political organisms as have been developed in the countries of European position. This lack has led to the formation of many difficult problems under modern conditions which bring China into contact with foreign states organized along strongly national lines, and which have under the Republic which has succeeded the Manchu dynasty, imposed the duty of national self-government upon a people hitherto accustomed to the exercise of only a minimum of legal control or administration by any authority outside of the family or clan group.

It is this inexperience and consequent failure to evolve any wider

He observes that its first budget is welcomed, not only by the consumer, whose indirect taxation it diminished, but by the financial world of the City of London, and that among the few criticisms brought against it by Liberal economists, one is that the Socialist Chancellor of the Exchequer actually has been too vigorous and too much shed schemes of what it was the fashion to describe as predatory an economic purist in his treat-ent of his surplus.

Unemployment Decreased

The newspaper reader has been appalled by predictions of closing factories and commercial paralysis. He finds in the official returns that the unemployment percentage av erage was 15 per cent in 1921 and 1922, 11 per cent in 1923, and, after the electoral catastrophe which brought the Labor Government to power, was under 8 per cent in May, 1924. He had been cautioned to expect an outburst of strikes, it to expect an outburst of strikes, in which no government supported by trade unionists would dare to intervene. He finds by experience that if disputes have not conspicuously diminished, neither have they conspicuously increased, and that those which have been threatened, or even begun, have been settled by the cotton weaver and trade-unionist who is Minister of Labor with quite unusual expedition, and, quite unusual expedition, and, greatly daring, he reflects that it even may not be wholly a disadvantage for a minister to know something of the subjects with which he is appointed to deal.

He finds that the members of this Cabinet probaby have "3", ten more books and traveled more miles outside England than both the two preceding cabinets together. He learns that almost the whole educational world, harassed by the financial parsimony of the presiding government, heaves a sigh of relief at the advent of the Labor Minister, that the Labor president of the Board of Education takes steps at once to restore the state scholarships to universities which his predecessor in a fit of folly miscalled economy had abolished, and to increase the number of children passing from primary to secondary schools, and that in recognition of his services to education, he receives the quite unusual compliment of being formally thanked in person by the annual conference of the National Union of Teachers.

Finding that the only vocal criti-

the National Union of Teachers.

Finding that the only vocal criticism on the educational policy of the Labor Government comes from those who fear it may spend too much on education, the reader observes these surprising phenomena and sometimes—so ungrateful is human uature—he is positively indignant at them. His relief at the non-fulfillment of his prophecies is tempered by arrogance with the Government for non-fulfilling them. And by one of the lovable inconsistencies of the politician, having for a decade denounced the Labor Party a decade denounced the Labor Party as a gang of revolutionists, he loudly proclaims his indignation at loudly proclaims his indignation at the revelation that it is not revolutionary at all. He was wrong be fore, and he is wrong now. Th Labor Party never was revolutionary in method: it is and will continue to be, revolutionary in aims.

Labor Movement Lasting

Mr. Tawney, after outlining the history of the Labor Party's rise to prominence, went on to speak of its future, declaring it was a movemen would last and one which expected to produce 'radical, if gradual, change' practical application of traditional affairs, "analogous to—but, let us hope, less ruthless than—that which took place in Europe when the com mercial and middle classes broke the long monopoly of power or privilege, or both, enjoyed by the landed aristocracy." He continued:

Whether a political development is or is not sufficiently significant to deserve serious attention depends of the force of which it is the expres sion. In itself merely a symptom, importance can be judged only afte not some adroit political tactics of accidental and momentary interest, but some permanent modifications in the structure of society or some com rhe structure of society of some competition of political expediency. Though such changes in organization and political thought are constantly taking place, it is only at comparatively long intervals that their results accumulate with suffi-cient volume and mass to involve the as to the control of public affairs

But when they do, the result is decisive, and may give its whole bias and quality to the political life of several generations. Whether simiseveral generations. Whether similarly momentous consequences will follow from the rise of a third party based in origin on the organization of the manual working classes and expressing their ideas, it is still too early to say. Though my own belief is that they will it is conceivable at least that they former will take at least, that the former will take n and the latter will not stand the test of experience.
Of the history of the Labor Party

Mr. Tawney said: Mr. Tawney said:

The formation of a labor party acting independently of other parties dates only from 1900, when it was known as the labor representation committee; the present name dates only from 1906, and the present constitution from 1910. But the Labor Party is merely the pothe Labor Party is merely the po litical wing of a much more com plete social and economic move ment. It derives its significance from the fact that it is not simply an improvised arrangement de-signed to meet the immediate exigencies of parhamentary but that it is the expression of forces which have their roots deep

Organized now in such a way as to unite all who share its political creed, whatever their economic affiliations, and thus admitting numerous members of the professional and business classes, its social background is the spontaneous drawing together of the working classes in the trade-union and codrawing together of the working classes in the trade-union and cooperative movement, the former now with 5,550,000 members, the latter catering to about 3,500,000 householders. Together, whether formerly allied in a definite coalition (as is the case with the Labor Party and the majority of tradeunions) or merely acting together (as is the case with the Labor Party and the co-operative move-ment), they form a threefold or-

Perhaps this year sees more ingenious and intensive means found to stimulate registration and voting than other years. There are the small towns pledging themselves to support a candidate or a group of candidates by telephoning a certain number of voters each day. SIGNIFICANCE OF CHILD LABOR AMENDMENT IS TOLD

Miss Johnson of Massachusetts Commission Corrects Some Referendum Misapprehensions

There are 2,773,000 children 10 to 17 years of age gainfully employed in the United States. More than half this number, 1,650,000, are employed in non-agricultural pursuits 50,000 alone in mining and 772,000 in manufacturing and mechanical in-dustries. The hours of labor of such minors, the conditions of their employment, and the processes in which they are engaged, are all mat ters of concern to persons who are interested in the welfare of children. They are matters of legislation regulation in the states having the most progressive labor laws, as in Massa-chusetts."

So spoke Miss Ethel M. Johnson Assistant Commissioner of Labor for Massachusetts, in an interview in reference to the Child Labor Amendment which awaits ratification by the states and is to appear In Massachusetts Miss Johnson wishes to correct some misappreand misstatements by opposition forces appearing in various peri-odicals. She said:

In one article the statement is made that the amendment is an "anti-work, compulsory school proposition for all persons under 18 years of age." This, however, is not the case. In the first place, the amendment relates to labor, which is not identical with work.

Empowers Congress

The term labor is usually interpreted as applying to gainful employment outside the home. It does not cover, for instance, the daily tasks of children in connection with the household or the farm. It is broader in scope, however, than "employment," as employment is defined in the statutes of some of the states in such a way as to exclude agricultural labor and domestic service.

The term was presumably selected for these reasons. It is broad enough to permit Congress, if it desires, to to permit Congress, he is to the com-enact legislation restricting the com-mercialized labor of children in agri-mercialized labor of children in agrinot broad enough, however, to au-thorize legislation prohibiting the legitimate work of children around their homes.

The amendment confers specifically upon Congress the authority it was assumed Congress had when the federal child labor laws were enacted. The states already have this power, and exercise it to varying extent. The statements that the states have not attempted to limit, regulate or prohibit the labor or employment of persons up to the age of 18 years," and that "no state, and we include our own, would by its own statutes assume such a power the occupations and lives of over the occupations and lives of persons between 16 and 18," are innumber of years. They are enforced with the co-operation of the courts which impose the legal penalty in cases where violations have been proved.

Massachusetts has higher standards for the protection of children in industry than many of the states—higher standards presumably than would be embodied in federal legislation, since the amendment confers no power on Congress to regulate the labor of minors 18 and over, while Massachusetts regulates the while Massachusetts regulates the employment of minors up to 21.

The passage of a federal child labor law approaching the standards now in effect in Massachusetts would relieve this State from a certain type of competition. This competition is not primarily with the labor of minors under 14. The most serious competition is presented by the labor of minors under 18 in states that do not regulate and restrict the employment of such minors as carefully as Massachusetts does.

Massachusetts regulates the hours fully as Massachusetts does.

Massachusetts regulates the hours, night work and conditions of employment for minors in certain occupations up to 21 years of age, and prohibits the employment of minors under 18 in a number of occupations. The amendment would enable Congress to pass legislation establishing uniform regulations approaching Massachusetts standards for all of the states.

In Massachusetts all of these setts standards for all of the states.

In Massachusetts all of these minors are limited to a 48-hour week. They are not permitted to work before 6:30 in the morning or after 6 o'clock at night. Those under 16 years of age are restricted to an eight-hour day, and those under 18 to a nine-hour day. The children under 16 in the southern cotton milis, for instance have less protection than the children under 18 in the northern mills. They may legally work from 55 to 69 hours a week, and from 10 to 11 hours a day. In all of these states they are less adequately protected against night work than they are in Masachusetts.

Bishops, Judges, Merchants, and School Teachers Among Classes Pitching Tents at Municipal Camping Grounds

Motor tourists for the last two months have been converging at Boston from all points of the compass, halting momentarily to "look and admire" and then moving on to some other point of interest. Thousands of cars have streamed through the city and in this number were found the widest possible assortment of people, automobiles, auxiliary equipment and general method of travel. Bulges on the sides, back or top of one of these wandering automobiles may turn out to be any-thing from a double bed with a waterproof roof on it to a collapsible bathtub or a serviceable but inviting tent. Most of the travelers carry their homes strapped to the sides of their cars, but not a few have actually built small-scale homes on the chassis of trucks and have installed everything, from a cooking stove to a radio set, that would make for their comfort while crossing miles of west-ern prairie—or the hills of central Massachusetts.

Few of them are on tour merely for the pleasure of the thing. They are on education bent, according to Raymond C. Palmer, owner of the camping grounds, and rarely ask di-rections to theaters, or other amuse-ment places. Their stay in Boston and vicinity is usually taken up with investigation of the historical and scenic attractions offered by the city, such as Bunker Hill, Lexington, Concord, and the various libraries and museums. LINCOLN. R. I. Aug. 2 (Special)— Inemployment conditions in the mill Unemployment conditions in the mill communities of the Blackstone Valley, acute at this time, are being met by seasonal work out of doors for many of the operatives. Berry-picking and farm work have been popular diversions, but this town has taken advantage of an abundance of labor to improve its roads. Road building, which could not be pushed for several years because of lack of labor, is being completed now.

FORE RIVER PLANT INCREASES ACTIVITY

More activity at the Fore River plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation at Quincy will prevail during the next is months than has been the case for a long time on a result of the signing of a contract with the Argentine Government. Work will be provided for about 3000 employees as a result of a successful pid of that company to obtain the contract for bringing two Argentine battleships up to date. The Argentine ships are the largest in their navy and were originally built at this same plant. They are the Rivadavia and the Morena, which are to be thoroughly overhauled and modernized. The Rivadavia is expected to reach Fore River within a short time and the Morena will follow a few months later. The Rivadavia is a 25,000 ton battleship and a sister ship to the Morena, and both boats are to be equipped with oil-burning engines and modern fire controlling apparatus.

Without expressing any further opinion, I am sure the Senator will be pleased to know that international revolutionary communism opposes him. For my part, I should consider it extremely unfortunate for any political leader, or for any bona fide trade union leader or official to have the friendship of those whose first object is the destruction of all of our democratic institutions and finally of the Republic itself.

The whole movement headed by Foster and Ruthenberg has been crushed in the United States by the fight led by the American Federation of Labor. It is natural that these agents of Moscow leading a forlorn straggling of revolutionists beaten at every turn, should seek to arouse interest by the use of vituperative language. They are disappointed men who know that they cannot carry out the orders of their masters in Moscow, and who know that the reason for this is the unyielding defense of Democracy and American institutions by the American Federation of Labor.

Rupert and Robert, as you may have heard, were unusual clothespins. They had been like any other clothespins till the day when a lady who was visiting Jane's and Henry's mother had taken them and painted them and named them Rupert and Robert. After that they were a very intelligent looking pair of clothespins. The Ruralist and His Problems

ENYON L. BUTTERFIELD must have been much encouraged at the feeling which very apparently moved the 500 farm people who stood and applauded him for many long moments one night this week, when he delivered his valedictory as head of the agricultural college that under his leadership has so greatly influenced agricultural movements in New England. "It is with genuine regret that we present him for the last time as our president," Director John D. Willard of the Massachusetts Agricultural had the leadership of the foremost agricultural thinker in the United States."

Into his valedictory Dr. Butterfield packed his whole philosophy of country life. He spoke of "the permanent abiding problems farmers must always face." Of all these problems, the one he most emphasized was the lack of study and discussion among rural groups. He deplored the decay of the lyceum and the old-fashioned village store debating society. "There is a tendency today not to participate in the debate that draws out the individual. We have somebody else think for us and talk to us. The whole tendency of the times is to be so busy that we get only second-hand fragments of discussion. He saw this lack of study and discussion most apparent among farm people.

The farmers people in different scannot come together in a political party; farm people in different scannot come together in a political party; farm people in different scitons have interests as diverse as industrial and mercantile groups. But he believed the farm group could and ought to unite on certain political fundamentals. The chief of these was their attitude toward the peace of the world. "I doubt if any group of people in the world is as set in the interests of world peace as the farmers. Yet I doubt if in any other group peace problems are as little discussed.

and ought to unite on certain political fundamentals. The chief of these was their attitude toward the peace of the world. "I doubt if any group of people in the world is as set in the interests of world peace as the farmers. Yet I doubt if in any other group peace problems are as little discussed.

"If the farmers and the college people do not look out," he continued, "it will not be long before the Labor group in this country will be the best educated group in America; because the forum idea for study and debate is taking hold in this group as in no other. It is a development that ought to be at the root of interest in a democracy."

It is amazingly interesting to an outsider to get inside the faculty of an nagricultural college and among a group of county agents, the men who advise farm groups on their farming and business problems. These are the leaders whose influence is almost the determining factor in farm movements. They are the men who have

The Volga is a great Russian River but was unknown to thousands until within the last few years the great popularity of the "Joga Boatmen's Bong" drew the attention of at least all music lovers to this stream. Tonight, Saturday, from WMAP, we will have the "Eight Volga Bingers." This boatmen's song will be one of the numbers. Those who saw the impressive scene in the Chauve-Souris when a male chorus sang this as they slowly pulled with measured rhythm on a heavy hawser will have that pleasant memory refreshed.

but in the case of this particular set the L-H Radio Agency, Box S1, Back Ray Station, Boston, Mass. has prepared a simplified drawing layout and wiring diagram of the various parts used so that anyone with a little care should be able to build the set up in a satisfactory manner. The antenna you mention will be satisfactory. You could stand about 20 feet more in length, possibly, but it should make little, if any, difference. Any standard method of controlling the filament current such as you mention will be found to work out, as the filament adjustment in this circuit is not at all critical. Three tubes will work out satisfactorily, particularly if a large tube is used for the audio amplifier. A factory neutralizing condenser will be satisfactory. but in the case of this particular set the now seems the lot assigned to dramatists—notwithstanding Shaw, who breaks this and every other rule of the theater. One has only who breaks this and every outer rule of the theater. One has only to glance at the average play-bill to see that printers, unmindful of the quid pro quo, seldom waste much of their ink on the names of authors. And playgoers with their patient in attention, lose all personal interest in dramatists after they have made complimentary or other noises at them on the first night. Concert audiences, however, still include a fairly large number of those who feel that a work and its composer are fundamentally more interesting than the art of the subjugating strong, silent man who conducts it, however talented he may be. They still believe, in a word, that the originator is of more importance than his interpreter.

This is true, of course; but as

This is true, of course; but as Arthur Symons long ago pointed out to us: "Art is the creation of beauty in form, visible or audible, and the artist is the creator of beauty in visible or audible form. But beauty is infinitely various, and as truly beauty in the voice of Sarah Bernhardt or the silence of Duse as in a face painted by Leonardo or a poem written by Blake." And the critic is sometimes faced with the paradox that an interpreter can possess a more individual and truly creative gift than the one whose work he is gift than the one whose work he is interpreting or, rather, re-creating. Marie Tempest -

But how many authors and composers can discipline their words and notes to the light airness and grace, the perfect and seemingly unstudied spontaneity with which Miss Tempest delights our ears and eyes? A little movement of the hands, a glance, the ghost of a shrug of the shoulders, and even the dull line comes to life with a meaning beyond the reach of words, a meaning that bridges, as it were the gan between speech and were, the gap between speech and gesture. And if authors were only as dexterous with their dialogue as Miss Tempest is with a handkerchief parasol! Certainly Mr. Bax is

Vladimir Shavitch as a Conductor

THE conductor of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, Vladimir Shavitch, must be counted in, too. Not that I speak from direct knowledge of his concerts. But here he is, or was the other day, back in New York, after directing the London Symphony Orchestra in a program in London, and the Lamoureux Orchestra in one in Paris. It strikes me that I should feel entitled to a place on the roll of first-class musicians, if I had done that. So, whatwars the crohestral institution is several performances of "Antonia" by New York, after directing the London

For my part, I find degrees of musical appreciation as I go about; and I note, also, differences of artistic interest. An orchestra, according to my observation. is usually an admirable mechanism for public expression, though by no means the best one in all places. Sometimes a best one in all places. Sometimes a poser as more or less an orchestral impossibility in Paris, and that was Brahms. One whom he mentioned as a certainty there and as a great as a certainty in tere and as a great uncertainty in London, was Liszt. At his own concert in Paris, he pre-sented the "Faust" symphony of Liszt, and at his London concert, the fourth symphony of Tschaikowsky.

Shavitch a conductor? No, some one will say. He was trained as a pianist, and the pianist's approach o orchestral interpretation is faulty This objection I ventured to submi to Mr. Shavitch, who started to meet it with arguments. No doubt he would have settled the case against the objectors, had I let him pursue to the end. But really, I think their contention stands on nothing but a mistaken theory of appreciation. A conductor, to their fancy, should rise from the ranks By way of proof, they point to Nikisch, who played the violin, and to Toscanini, who was originally a violoncellist. But in my recollection will attend to.

Enough; the dispute is a mere game, and not worth the candle, either. Let us acknowledge that putting together the entire material of the score and adjusting balances of tone and proportions of design are the main things, and who will deny that the planist-conductor should come out as well in regard to them as anybody else? A line of discussion of Mr. Sha-vitch's which deeply interested me had to do with directing a concerto for orchestra and violin or plano. He maintained that a conductor leading a presentation of such a work is an accompanist, his problem being to make the principal artist's

The Sleeping Beauty, by Edith Sitwell:
Alfred A. Knopf. New York.

"The Sleeping Beauty" is the old story told in the New Poetry. It makes a gorgeous tale decorative as a figured gold brocade, rich as an embroidery showing gardens of apricots and strawberries where apes play and satyrs hide. It is not easy to read, although it is written for the most part in simple couplets, because it is loaded with literary reference and so completely covered with metaphor of sense and fancy the the cloth of narrative and thought is almost entirely with an illustrative understanding. If this is a lower order of art from that of a romantic one, it is all the more amazing that L'hermitte can hold us with survivors of the Imagists than any other of this generation; for though to read, although it is written for the most part in simple couplets, because it is loaded with literary reference and so completely covered with metaphor of sense and fancy the the cloth of narrative and thought is almost entirely hidden.

One is a little bewildered by the thought is almost entirely hidden. One is a little bewildered by the embellishments, and yet when one has relinquished hope or desire for story, character or emotion, one is also charmed. The most interesting part of it is the wealth of analogy, quaint in "under saint-blue skies," often grotesquely humorous as in

Brazilian Forest Trails

The black-and-white work of Keith cent of Corcovado, he says: "From Headerson, exhibiting extraordinary qualities of technique, became well known last year, with the publication of a new edition of Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico." Not only did the array of drawings that illuminated the old text show this extet's comthe old text show this artist's com-mand of line, but also exemplified the sincerity and depth of his archæological research. Nor was Keith Henderson unknown as a writer, for the "Letters to Helen" published four or five years ago were written with ease and engaging frankness.

We know, thus, something of what may be expected when the present volume offers a kind of running diary of a Brazilian journey, profusely illustrated with all the sights from Oporto to Rio de Janeiro, including birds and beasts and flowers, tropic scenery, and a number of delicate and vivacious portraits. "Palm Groves and Humming Birds" is a delightful book.

The artist attended, officially, the congress of Americanists held in Rio in the summer of 1922, and, leaving the work of reports and comments upon the conferences to other hands, he is concerned in these pages with giving a day-to-day impression of the experiences of the trip, from the moment of starting out in an ordinary dull train to the glorious hours when, sitting in a tropic swamp, he began to evolve a technique for expressing the tumultuous vegetation of Brazilian forest. In this he has been bril-liantly successful. The drawing cov-ering pages 116 and 117, and show-ing "A Gorge in the Forest," does actually convey, without the aid of color, the splendor and teeming ex-uberance of plant life upon the slopes of the granite mountains above Rio

Bay.

Here are old friends of this part Here are old friends of this part of the South American tropics—tillandsias hanging in tangles from boughs of the jacca tree with its surprising fruit, the odd geometrical heads of Araucaria pines, the pale split rags of banana leaves. Equally yivid is a later drawing showing tall cactus in the foreground, royal palms, and in the distance the strange cone of the Pāo d'Assucar: "Some lesser mountain of the moon might look normal beside it. Nothing earthly would." remarks the artist. earthly would," remarks the artist, and with this I think everyone who knows the breath-taking beauty of this scene at dawn will agree.

A vein of almost Puck-like humor A vein of almost Puck-like numor runs through the diary, a sort of boyish zest in life. The eye of the artist takes in the bullock carts of Portugal, that appear "as if they had been hacked out of whole trees by neolithic man"; the waiters and bedmakers on board the Brazilian vessel, with much Negro and South American Indian blood in them, who "move about in their cool clothes with the upright supple bearing of men whose forebears were but lately nude." No bird could appear in the sky but this true nature-lover saw it. I think that the only thing that really makes Keith Henderson angry is the sight of birds in cages, crowded and forlorn.

The portraits of Brazilians are ex-tremely alive. The racial qualities, the beauty, of the South American

A braham Lincoln's

Abraham Lincoln. Master of Words, by Daniel Kilham Dodge. D. Appleton & Co. 11.50. This professor of English in the University of Illinois has been studying Lincoln for the past 20 studying Lincoln for the past 20 years and declares that despite the vast "output of Lincoln literature during the past quarter of a century, the subjejct is far from being exhausted"; there are, for example, Lincoln papers which have not yet been released, as well as the Hay Diary, which is still in manuscript form, to be consulted only by special permission of the Harvard Library authorities.

Another source, thus far insufficiently probed, is formed by the newspapers; Professor Dodge makes a beginning in this direction with quotations from local periodicals of Lincoln's day. He corrects the Lin-coln legend which represents the martyred President as hastily writing the Gettysburg address on the train or after reaching Gettysburg. The degree of industry with which he has tackled his self-imposed problems may be gauged from his words that "No statement, however," apparently authoritative, has been accepted without verification, and in one case, the treatment of the Lost Speech, I have not hesitated to form a respectable minority of one."

From these pages one gathers the image of a young Lincoln often prone to rhetorical inflation; of a beginner in the art of speech-making, filled with an inner uneasiness that was readily conquered once the speech was on his way; of a serious thinker upon state and national problems, not too often employing the leaven of that humor which he so appreciated in his private life. One of his sentences, spoken during his presidential period, deserves to become a by-word among all such as use the glory of our language in public: "I believe I shall never be old enough to speak without embarrass-ment when I have nothing to talk about." An admirable sentiment, rendered twice admirable by the dithe national councils in Austria, teacher-training classes. rectness of its statement and the Czechoslovakia and Hungary of the lash of wit that curis at the close.

As he grew older, Lincoln shed the rhetorical garment; his speech acquired that terse, yet melodious character that informs the famous Gettysburg address. "For Lincoln writing and speaking were a means to an end in themselves and, conscious as he was of his own ability, he would have been very much surprised if any one during his lifetime had ranked him among the world's greatest writers."

A special feature of the book is Professor Dodge's study of the contemporary reception, by the newspapers, magazines and public men lash of wit that curis at the close.

Konrad Bornhak's "In the New Empire" (Hafen Verlag: Berlin) may make von Sybel's work seem antiquated. Envised "Garman History From 1870. titled "German History From 1870 to 1890," it has left nothing untouched, except some of the documents which von Sybel quoted at length and which Bornhak leaves, therefore, unquoted.

Goethe wrote his "Götz von Berlichingen" in 1773. Walter Scott translated it into English. That the ititular hero is an historical character is well known. Unusual interest attaches to the drama at present because of the recent death of the last of Götz von Berlichingen's descendants: Count Erich von Berlichingen-Rossach. There are, to be sure, Berlichingens still living at Jagtshausen—the same town that plays a rôle in test of the substantial sum, leaving and the net proceeds be nothing, or they may be a substantial sum, leaving and the net proceeds be nothing, or they may be a substantial sum, leaving and the net proceeds be nothing, or they may be a substantial sum, leaving a generous residue for benevo-struction—that equals China. Out of the barrage of eighteenth century wit and epithet emerged a sonorous voice, a solitary figure— huge, shabby, shuffing or rolling on its way from the offices of the Gen-tleman's Magazine, in Clerkenwell, to a house near by the pleasant fields, a temporary home; not the Great Cham of Literature, speaking as correctly second edition, living in idleness, dust and confusion, but indeed his younger self.

Anon there passed a shy dreamer— one Thomas Gray out for a breath of country air, summoned no doubt by the view of the fields and woods from his drawing-room windows in Bloomsbury Square, or by a sudden, intense longing for the beauty and the quiet of Stoke Pogis, which the sweet peas and pinks and scarlet Martogon lilies, the double stocks and flowering marjoram from Covent Garden refused to satisfy.

Locust Trees in

From Vienna to Budapest in early summer Hungary is a garden of fresh wheat fields, strips of budding corn and quarters of black soil. The wild flowers paint borders be-tween the fields and carpet the banks between the railroad and the fields. The popples were brightest: sometimes, they scattered in couples, but most often they rushed together in clamoring groups of scarlet. The cornflowers were there, a thread of blue sky twisted through the grasses. There were yellow flowers and Shut in by the friendly mist, guided step by step in the sure path. I went forward in that blissful state which belongs, for the most part, to the glamorous memories of childhood or to the marvelous fairvland of dreams. It seemed incredible that the trail led to a hotel, so remote, so strange, it was. For, while the mist lasted, there lay, once again, the light that never was, on sea or land.

Elmer H. Bright & Co., Boston: Specialties such as American Can, General Electric and U. S. Steel have led the advance, and the declaration of the extra dividend on Steel stimulated the business sentiment. One may almost consider that the common stock of the steel corporation is on a regular 7 per cent basis, and that the directors are of the opinion that forward business warrants an optimistic view.

Schirmer, Atherton & Co., Boston: If anybody is in doubt concerning the prospects for active stock markets during the next year or two, he should reflect on the following factors affecting, not only this country, but the entire civilized world: 1, the probable imminence of economic settlement in Europe, through acceptance of the Dawes Reparations Plan 2, the probable election of Calvin Coolidge to the Presidency of the United States; 3, the profound effect on the agricultural class of this country of the great advance in grain and hog prices during the past month; 4, the prospect of several railroad mergers and consolidations.

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston: Industrial stocks are now at their highest point of the year and not far from the highest of the last two years. They have discounted all that can be expected in the way of improved earnings. No doubt there are such stocks that—because of the expanding power of a particular enterprise will some day sell well above their present quotations—but it should be realized that the general level is high. Speculation for a further advance involves grave risk. This is a public market and there is no saying how long it may continue, but it is safe to say that no accumulation by strong interests is taking place at this level.

F. L. Milliken & Co., Boston: After seven weeks of rising stock prices, without more than a 2-point setback in the Dow-Jones industrial average, not to mention 10 days without a reaction of more than a point, it is not surprising that the Street was called upon to digest some of the buying which had taken place, but, rather, that it was not forced to do this sooner. We feel that this reaction has strengthened the technical position of the market to such an extent that the industrial average should find but little difficulty in pushing through and substantially bettering its February high level—

pearance in the midsummer season, but a change of sentiment for the bet-ter has been observed in the last half of July.

It has been due in large part to the remarkable rise in the prices of the farm staples which heretofore have been the source of most of the pessimism abroad in the land. The west hesitated at first to believe that anything as good could possibly be true, but when hogs went over the $10 mark the most skeptical were obliged to admit that a change had come across the

the most skeptical were obliged to admit that a change had come across the face of affairs.

All reports agree that the outlook for business has improved very much in the wheat and hog territory, which includes all of the west. Admitting that the corn crop will be short, with a fine crop of oats to help out on stock feed, there will be enough corn for the market and for fattening purposes to bring good returns on a full crop. The wheat-growers have a good crop and a

wheat-grown is the good price.

There is a good beginning for fall expectations in this increased purchasing power for a large part of the farm population. Already reports from the west tell of the stimulating effects and a larger cotton crop than last year and a better price. A settlement in Eu-rope will mean much to cotton, and also to the grain and hog producers.

NEW YORK CURB

NEW YORK, Aug. 3—Revival of a strong upward movement in the Petroleum shares featured an otherwise quiet session on the curb exchange today. Penn Mex Fuel made a further improvement selling to 36 %.

Business in the industrial division was in reduced volume with price changes generally narrow. New Jersey Zinc and Borden's Condensed Milk were in demand at higher levels, while the remainder of the list held steady around the previous closing figures.

During the week there were widely divergent movements in the industrial groups. Radio issues concerned in specific patents and licensing operations whose movements have for a long time been directed to higher levels, suddenly changed their position and tendency, Dubliler Condenser, Ware Radio and Haseltine joining in the sharp decline. At the same time the feature of Padio Corporation of dendency. Dublies Contained in the sharp decline. At the same time the issues of Radio Corporation of America were in steady demand. Radio common moved up to 5%, a new high for recent trading, and the new common and preferred shares were established at new high quotations. Coal stocks demanded special attention. Glen Alden started the week with a gain of 12% points, selling at 122%, a new high record, but lost about half this gain in the next few days. Lehigh Valley was in the list of record breakers, advancing to 45, and Lehigh Coal Sales ranged from $1\% Q$ 38. Coal stockers also were strong.

One feature of the situation is the tendency to exchange short dated securities for long dated ones as witnesses of the Governement 3½ per cent conversion loan as compared with weakness in the national war bonds.

This is connected with the fact that another week has gone by without a rise in the Bank of England rate. It cannot be said that the expectation of such rise has yet disappeared, but investors are no longer getting rid of long dated securities in anticipation of its taking place immediately.

Rubber output restriction has advanced another stage in the automatic coming into force of the reduction from 60 to 55 per cent of the standard production exportable by British Malayan and Ceylon companies working under this scheme. This means a reduction by some 4000 tons in the total rubber to be placed upon the market by these concerns in the quarter beginning yesterday.

This action follows the poor prices ginning yesterday.

This action follows the poor prices obtained during the last three months.

Work for Higher Prices

The position is now reached, however, where it may become more potent. It is pointed out, for example, that unless the average price during August. September—and October reaches 1s. 3d. a pound—it is now under 1s. 1d.—the exportable allowance will be further reduced under this scheme by another $000 tons, making 12,000 tons reduction in six months, to be followed by still greater curtailment between November and April unless a 1s. 3d. price limit is meanwhile reached. Its promoters in these circumstances see in the recent improvement in demand especially on American account a definitely more hopeful outlook.

The rise in British commodity prices has begun to be observed here in con-

Figures now published of last month when a sharp upward movement replaced the comparative stagnation of June. The advance since then has been maintained, and figures for the current week are expected to show a further advance. This parallelism has disappointed those who looked to the long anticipated rise in American prices to facilitate the return to parity in the dollar's relations with sterling. It is pointed to also, however, as reducing British manufacturers' fears lest the markets should be upset as this movement proceeds.

MIDDLE STATES OIL NOTES

NEW YORK, Aug. 2—Failure of the Middle States Oil Corporation to deposit funds to meet the payments of principal and interest due yesterday on its 7 per cent notes, company officials expained, was due to a desire to await a court ruling on the standing of these securities. The notes were issued to pay for Southern States Oil stock and the legality of the transaction was questioned by stockholders.

DEVELOPMENTS IN EUROPE A

BULL FACTOR

ST. 1994 Dr. 1994 Sentiment in Wall Street Is Much Improved by

NEW YORK, Aug. 2 (Special)—Developments this week in the United States and Europe were largely of a character to encourage still further active speculative buying of stocks. There was not very much definite news during the first half of the week relative to the interallied conference. With the presentation, however, of the French plan with respect to an international loan to Germany, with the acceptance of it by committee No. 1 of the conference, and with the decision to summon German representatives not later than today, it was apparent that decided progress had been gentlement with respect to the Fure.

parent that decided progress had been made.

Sentiment with respect to the European situation was favorably influenced also by the reports from Paris yesterday afternoon that the French adjourn sine die, which, apparently, was equivalent to approval of the foreign policy of Premier Herriot.

Much attention was given to these European developments in international banking circles here, but it is a question whether the average speculator in stocks accorded them as much prominence in his consideration of the news of the week as he did to the declaration of another etxra dividend of 50 cents a share on United States Steel common. After that announcement was made and it became known also that the net earnings of the United States Steel Corporation for the quarter ended June 30 were at least $2,000,000 above the minimum estimate, the common stock of the corporation was bought aggressively and reached 108½ yesterday.

Expect Better Business

States Steel Corporation of the corporation was bought aggressively and reached 108½.

Quite likely this extra dividend was quite likely this extra dividend was declared, for one reason, because Judge E. H. Gary and his associates are expecting considerably better conditions in the steel industry from now on. In fact, they prevailed to an increasing extent during July. The records show that the volume of new business during that month was considerably larger than for the one next preceding.

Within the last few days it became known, also, that the United States Steel Corporation was operating at about 46 or 47 per cent of capacity. While this is low in comparison with the level at which it was operating before the period of depression began, the figures show a distinct improvement over the lowest levels of recent months.

The railroads are handling a larger Expect Better Business

The railroads are handling a larger The railroads are handling a larger volume of business than they have been for several months back. The carloadings for the week ended July 19 totaled 990,284, which was the largest for any week this year since March 1.

19 totaled 990,284, which was the largest for any week this year since March 1.

These figures represented an increase of nearly 20,000 cars over the preceding week, but were more than 98,000 below the record for the corresponding period of last year, when the loadings were running steadily in excess of 1,000,000 cars a week. The volume of railroad traffic should increase steadily from now on until the bulk of this year's crops is moved. Rumors of forthcoming railroad consolidations, and knowledge of the fact that conferences were being held almost daily with respect to the "Nickel Plate" merger naturally caused active speculation, first in the stocks of the companies that are expected to be embraced in that undertaking, and then in the railroad list as a whole.

Other Consolidations

Other Consolidations
There are other consolidations that are under way, but which are not yet in a definite shape. Some of them are not likely to be for some time. In the latter class might be mentioned the proposal of executives of the principal eastern trunk lines to present to the Interstate Commerce Commission as soon as practicable a plan for putting together all the railroads in the eastern territory.

ting together all the railroads in the eastern territory.

While the copper market continues rather quiet, prices for the metal have held firm, and more active foreign buying is expected if an agreement is reached at the interallied conference in the near future. Copper shares, while somewhat irregular at times, have displayed quite pronounced strength.

The gap between the cost of replacement and mill selling prices has been steadily widening, making it the exception where a mill has been able to break even on both yarns and cloth. The majority of mills have lost substantial amounts, both because of low prices and short time operations and inability to sell at any price.

H.O.Kinsey Springs Surprise on W. M. Johnston, Winning After 5-Set Battle

EABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 2 (Special ceted W. M. Johnston of San Fran-co, in a tennis match. This event surred yesterday in the final round the men's singles of the invitation rnament of the Seabright Lawn smis and Cricket Club, when H. O. neey captured the final set of a five-contest, coming from behind when parently hopelessly in the rear, to by a score of 6—6, 3—6, 6—3, 1—6, 3.

win by a score of 6—6, 3—6, 6—3, 1—6, 5—3.

California monopolized the prizes in this, the thirty-first annual renewal of the historic tourney. In addition to the victory of Kinsey, Miss M. K. Browne won the finals of the ladies' singles with ease from Miss Mayme MacDonald. Metropolitan champion, 6—0, 6—1; Miss Browne, paired with Mrs. T. H. Dudley, captured the women's doubles, 6—2, 6—1, from Miss MacDonald, and Miss Florence Ballin, in the third final completed yesterday. Besides these completed events, two California teams, Johnston and C. J. Griffin, and the Kinsey brothers. R. G. and H. O., will meet this afternoon in the finals of the men's doubles, as the latter pair put out the eastern aurvivors, K. H. Behr and Dean Mathey, in the semi-finals yesterday. 5—7, 6—2, 6—0. Finally, the mixed doubles is between Miss Browne and H. B. Snodgrass and Miss MacDonald, a former Seattle player, paired with W. K. Wesbrook, now residing in Pasadena.

| First Set | Firs Miss MacDonald ... 2 2 4 3 0 2 0—13—1 Great court generalship, in which its shots were brought off with the atmost effectiveness, was chiefly re-ponsible for the victory of Howard Kinsey over the former world cham-lon. Every sign of weakness on the part of Johnston was diligently watched for and taken advantage of, while varied styles of play, as well as a most baffling chance of pace, played their part in the result. But it so only fair to state that the old force played their part in the result. But it it is so may fair to state that the old force of the Davis Cup star showed itself only in flashes. Johnston was far become the form that has carried him to detory in the past, while Kinsey was at the very top of his game. Under these circumstances, the closeness of he contest might have been accounted for, but hardly the victory. Even in the final set, it was not until he very last game that it became apparent that Kinsey was going to vin. Johnston had led at 3-1, and hough Kinsey had overtaken and win. Johnston had led at 3—1, and though Kinsey had overtaken and passed him, this had occurred in the past, and the little coast star had steadled a trifle and drawn up once more to even terms. But this time the little push was lacking, the famous forehand drive that had lifted him out of many such difficulties failed to come off, and his strokes went wide of the court when he tried it.

The match itself was a see-saw affair, with first one then the other in command. Kinsey led at 3—1, in the first, only to be tied at 4-all, then winning the next two for the set.

lead to the end, though he had to win a long deuce game to do it. It was Kinsey's turn to lead in the third, and he did it thoroughly, taking the first four games with the loss of only five points, but Johnston followed with three, only to have Kinsey jump ahead once more for the set.

After the intermission, it looked as if the match would end in an easy victory for the little Californian. Kinsey managed to win his own service game at the beginning of the set, but the rest of the fourth was a procession, with Johnston capturing every game d to the end, though he had to wir h Johnston capturing every game considerable margins. This state of re continued into the fifth, till end of the fourth game, with hesies being freely made that Kinphesies being freely made that Kinrhight win one more game, if at:

the first three holes of the 18-hole J match.

Mrs. Cassriel had an easier time in her match with Mrs. Thomas Duer of S Lincoln Park, defeating her 6 and 5, after winning six of the first nine holes. Mrs. Cassriel has been easily the outstanding player of the tournament since she was low medalist in the qualifying round and has won most of her matches by large margins. Mrs. Smalley met stronger opponents and won her way in the finals only after several hard matches.

Miss Shults was 1'under par for the first six holes, but poor approaches, while Mrs. Smalley was playing superior golf, cost her the next three holes and they reached the turn all square. Neither gained an advantage for more than one hole until the seventeenth.

The veteran Brookes was scheduled to appear at the Seabright tournament along with Miss Holen Wills, but canceled his plans on receipt of a wire from Gerald Patterson, captain of the Australian Cup team, urging him to appear at the Crescent tourney.

NEW ZEALAND RUGBY TEAM OFF TO ENGLAND

By Special Cable

AUCKLAND, N. Z., Aug. 2—The New Zealand Rugby football team left for England yesterday amid public en-thusiasm. The national character of the tour was shown by the fact that the farewell gathering which saw the team off included the Governor-Gen-eral, Prime Minister, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, leaders of the Liberal and Labor parties, and

UNITED STATES GOLFERS STAR

Predominate in First Day of Canadian Open Play-Diegel Takes Lead

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 2 (Special) -American professionals dominated during the first day of play in the Canadian open golf championship at the Mount Bruno Club, yesterday, when the seven leaders at the end of the first 36 holes of the 70-hole competition were Americans and 11 out of the first 14 were from over the border line. As a result the chances are decidedly in favor of the title and the Rivermend Cup again making a trip south, as has been the case since Douglas Edgar of Atlanta, Ga., set the Douglas Edgar of Atlanta, Ga., set the fashion in 1919.

The leader at the half-way mark is Leo Diegel of Washington, who turned in cards of 73 and 71 for his rounds, and his total of 144 is one stroke better than that of Joseph Tourness of Fairview, N. Y.

One hundred and ten players, the greater number of whom are professionals, turned in cards for the 38 holes, and the ruling of the Royal Canadian Golf Association that only those players who made the 36 holes in not more than 20 strokes more than the leader would be eligible for the final two rounds, leaves 61 players still in the running, and these include 28 of the 35 Americans who competed. Ten of those who will play today are amateurs and two former Canadian amateur champions were one stroke above the limit.

The present amateur champion, Frank Thompson of the Toronto Mississauga, led the amateurs with 151, while two former holders of the amateur title, W. J. Thompson of Mississauga and G. S. Lyon of Lambton, are within the select 61. The Lyon family has two representatives, as Seymour Lyon, son of the veteran, was second amateur. Nichol Thompson, with 157, made the third of the Thompson brothers in the third and fourth rounds.

Diegel was one of the last players to

CO-OPERATIVE MOVE BY CANADIAN BERRY GROWERS SAVES DAY

VANCOUVER, July 26 (Special Correspondence)—Independent grow-er-shippers, more particularly Orientals, broke prices for raspberries on the Calgary, Edmonton and prairie markets again tois season by sendfruit. The situation was saved by the Berry Growers' Union, which withheld shipments and canned and frose their surplus.

J. A. Grant, provincial market com-missioner at Calgary, said that "independent and consignment shippers and growers owe their existence in the berry business to the self-sacri-fice of the co-operators."

problem of law enforcement as it applies to the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the United States, the women voters affiliated with the Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement will look about in an effort to single out those candidates for election to Congress who are known to be personally committed to a support of the statutes and the constitutional amendment. It is not enough, in the view of these aggressive and progressive women, that neither of the party platforms referred to contains the demands submitted by the organizations opposed to the prohibition amendment.' It was the intent of the managers of the wet campaign to force from one or the other of the two parties an admission that prohibition does not prohibit, and hence that it is a failure. But this effort miscarried ignominiously, as everyone knows. Yet there apparently remains with the women voters represented in the organization named a conviction that some candidates for office will be persuaded to interpret too loosely the general pledge which commits them, inferentially, to the support and enforcement of all laws, national and state. These women believe, no doubt, that so long as the enemies of prohibition insist that the issue of absolute enforcement is still debatable, those seeking public office should be required to declare, if they desire the support of the women of the United States, their unqualified adherence to the cause to which those women, as an overwhelming majority, are committed.

So it has been decided that in all those congressional districts where enforcement has been made a personal or political issue, there shall be a thorough canvass in an effort to insure the election of those candidates who are unqualifiedly pledged to support and en-Until this winnowing and force the law. selective process shall have been completed, it will be useless for political forecasters to make pre-election estimates as to the complexion of the next Congress. A recent test of spelling by public school children in Massachusetts compared with tests made in 1879 is reported to show marked improvement and do corresponding credit to modern methods of teaching the young idea to spell. But the age of the spellers, it appears, was not over nine years, and the words they spelled (or spelt) were such as they might reasonably be expected to use or know, which at least differs from the practice of the old-fashioned spelling-bee. In those days, for spellingbee purposes, a word was a word, irrespective of what the speller might think it meant, and the champion speller was the lad or lass who could spell more such words than anybody else. That was before the coming of school athletics, and the spelling-bee was a kind of mental athleticism: but after all it no more followed that the feats of champions indicated a high general average of spelling than the success of American athletes in the Olympic Games indicates an American electorate composed largely of athletes.

In a world where there is so much writing one has to spell with reasonable accuracy. But "reasonable accuracy" is an elastic term, and none know better than those who write much that it is well to keep friend Dictionary within easy call, in case of what the law courts call "reasonable doubt." One may companion friend Dictionary with a first-aid volume especially made up of words frequently misspelled (or misspelt). The existence of such a volume shows where stands or sits the average intelligent citizen, anxious to do right but often in perplexing doubt. There are professional writers, masterly selective of the Stevenson "right word," who honestly admit that they are not so masterly selective of the right way to spell it. For them exists, incidentally, the learned and patient proof reader. One reads and hears also that those who employ public and high school and even college graduates in more or less clerical positions oft find them disappointing spellers. But to this, one who happened to be acquainted with the printed and written speech over the past few centuries might answer that the average of spelling is probably higher than ever before: and that such criticism, as well as organized effort to simplify spelling, shows an ideal of correctness that marches hopefully ahead of attainment. Let him who can always and invariably spell his word without help cast the first stone.

Pronunciation, for one thing, changes faster than spelling. Early writers, after the invention of printing, had an easy time of it. They spelled (or spelt) as they went along, spelling a word one way in the beginning of a paragraph and another way in the middle. Readers knew it for the same word and were perfectly satisfied. But man in the aggregate apparently tends toward convention; and presently came the practice of spelling a word always the same way in the same paragraph. In correspondence until comparatively recently one might follow the early comfortable fashion, spell as one pleased, and not be ashamed of it. Spellings were established in what the learned now agree was rather a hit-or-miss manner. But mankind is also conservative. To prepare for a proper reform in spelling, wrote a member of the American Philological Society some forty years ago, "the first step is to break down, by the combined influence of enlightened scholars and of practical educators, the immense and stubborn prejudice which regards the established modes of spelling almost as constituting the language, as having a sacred character, as in themselves preferable to others." The immense and stubborn prejudice (which is simply an indignant way of mentioning force of habit) is still compelling the enlightened scholars and practical educators to go very slow.

Governor Wood believes rubber growing can be made a profitable industry in the Philippines.

Opportunity Knocks at Manila

In his message to the lately reassembled legislature he announces this, urging that legislation should be enacted which will so amend the land laws as to make it possible for capital to engage in the cultivation of rubber, and other products which require large areas and a considerable period of time for their development. Secretary of Commerce Hoover is one of not a few experts who share the Governor's opinion; he has been conferring with American rubber manufacturers, with the Philippines as his immediate text. The Washington Congress, too, has taken a step in this direction, having appropriated $500,000 to investigate ways of creating American-owned plantations in the protectorate. As yet but very little actually has been done there in this

If crude rubber can be produced in good quantity in the archipelago over which now flies the Stars and Stripes, a potent change will sweep the surface of the dreams of a mighty industry. For at this writing the world's raw rubber comes all but wholly from the British and Dutch plantings in the Middle East, in the Malay States, Ceylon and the Netherlands Indies. Save for the not more than "sample" production in the Philippines just mentioned, the United States grows not a pound of the material, and yet three-fourths of any year's total output is converted to man's use in the American mills. Leading the nations in the making of automobiles (to name but a single trade, albeit the most important, which depends largely on rubber), the tire manufacturer of the United States is to all intents entirely dependent on imports to fill his needs. Everyone knows how these are rising: in 1914, 131,000,000 pounds of foreigh rubber came to America; in '22 the figure had jumped to 568,000,000 pounds.

Mexico and the Isthmus lands cannot relieve the situation. Central American rubber is of lower grade than the Malaysian and Sumatran, while productiveness there is subaverage. As to South America, the output of Peru and Brazil, Bolivia and Venezuela, Ecuador and Colombia, is excellent, perhaps on a par with what comes from the Pacific plantations and surely not far below, but most of this is at a commercial disadvantage through high labor costs. Political insecurity, again, has discouraged investment in the Latin countries.

Where the rubber equation is worked out to a result satisfactory to the producers it is compact of five factors: climate, soil, ample labor at reasonable hire, transportation facilities, and (basically) an opportunity for the planter to acquire considerable tracts of land under longterm lease. It is this last which, today, is not possible in the Philippines, the law being what it is. The other four points, admittedly, are met already or offer slight difficulty in the meeting. The soil and climate in Mindanao are practically the same as those that have made the Dutch Indies so profitable in this regard. Jungles must be cleared and swamps drained, to be sure, but for this (as for the later labor among the brittle trees) the Moro is admirably adapted: strong and willing natives, working well under white control. The transportation factor is not now favorable, but this can be arranged fully within the six years needed to bring new plantings into bearing.

In the matter of capital, Governor Wood will not have far to seek-if two desiderata are secured: First, investors, native or foreign, must be assured of political stability for a period long enough to allow proper return on a heavy first cost. Secondly, there must be such an amending of the law as it now stands as will make possible leases to run from fifteen to fifty years-and it is exactly here that the lion in the path of progress may appear.

He is a brave man who will predict what the Manila legislators will do with this chance. Their hostility to the Governor is proved up to the hilt. For months it has been necessary only for him to favor a plan to insure its defeat in the insular Congress. Yet Dame Opportunity's latest knock at the door surely deserves other and better reply than opposition for the mere sake of opposing. No one other development would spell so assured and sizable an addition to the existing wealth of the islands as this, which may be summed up in the one magic word—rubber.

Creek, in England, for Holland, in 1609, there has been set up and appropriately dedicated a memorial commemorating that event. Thus there has been marked, on both sides of the Atlantic, the inconspicuous places made historic by the courageous pilgrimage begun and successfully completed by those courageous men and women who were willing to sacrifice all to the cause of religious liberty. Future generations of English-speaking peoples may thus be reminded of the debt of gratitude which civilization itself owes, to those who carried to the wilderness the seeds from which sprung those institutions of democracy which have become beacon lights in the course of mankind's progress. It is altogether fitting that these visible testimonials should be set up. The tendency too often is to forget the sacrifice and the courage which have made possible the enjoyment of the privileges accorded to those who seem | parts of the metropolis.

etimes inclined to accept human liberty and the emancipation from superstition and ignorance as gifts from the gods. If these are to be possessed they must first have been achieved. True progress does not come by chance or by accident. Those who have left a heritage such as this have hewn it out or preserved it by a mighty and unselfish struggle.

Ferruccio Busoni had the loftiest ideas, perhaps, about music of anybody who ever performed or composed. At all events, he can very likely be shown to have surpassed all contemporaries whose distinction was anything like his own in putting art above welfare. His

Busoni temperament was one of extreme positive and negative polarity. He liked everything that fell within his definition of music, and he heartily disliked whatever conflicted with the same. Many a person of his day won, like him, acclaim as a pianist and as a pedagogue; and at the same time, unlike him, turned his career to good financial

To his mind, apparently, the commercial was a denial of the beautiful. To entertain the slightest notion of moneymaking, even in the abstract, was to make the great refusal. He is said to have broken up gatherings at which he was a guest of honor, upon somebody's casually introducing the market place into the conversation. A word concerning the price of wheat, or mention of a stock quotation, was enough for him. likely as not, he reached to the peg for his hat and was gone.

Some of his antipathies, indeed, rather defy classification. He wrote an opera, "Die Brautwahl," in the comedy vein. But that did not mean that he was a humorist among humorists. For on a certain occasion, when he was brought into contact with a baritone famous for his characterization of buffo parts, he is said to have declared himself offended, on the ground of being compelled to meet a comedian.

When it came to the idealities of music, Busoni was for them: when, however, it came to the actualities, he was rather systematically against them. He disliked compositions written to a program, because he thought the mission of music was not to describe but to express emotion. And yet, take him on this very matter, he objected to emotion assuming a too realistic form. In one of his last essays, devoted to an exposition of a theory of opera, he makes the love scene of Italian opera-the grand duo, that is to say, for tenor and soprano -a particular target for his sarcasm.

The truth is that Busoni sought new paths. He considered that some men, of whom Beethoven was one, opened them; while others, of whom Wagner was one, closed them. As pianist, everybody will grant, probably, that he led into fresh fields. As composer, what? There are those who maintain that most of his pieces, and especially his orchestral scores, are records written in sand. But interpreters have as yet scarcely given Busoni more than sidelong glances. His piano transcriptions may be regarded as becoming settled in the repertory, and they are his less important efforts. If these have an interest for audiences of the present, it is reasonable to surmise that his original works will possess an even greater power for those of the future.

Editorial Notes

Those investigators at the Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York, who have been conducting a study of the question of fear in infancy and childhood deserve a hearty vote of thanks from all whose duty it is to help train young folks and who are willing to accept a new point of view. They have established the fact, for example, that the small child has no innate fear of the dark, and that he is born without any inherited fears whatever, although this latter statement is qualified by excepting the "fear which can be aroused by a sudden noise or by a loss of support." They have, moreover, discovered that "irrational fears, while lacking in children at the start, can yet be built up or acquired with an almost mysterious ease,' fact which, as they see it, makes parents largely responsible for their presence. Do not these findings give still another meaning to John's words, "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear"?

Four pages of correspondence published in the American Bar Association Journal, as an article by John H. Wigmore, dean of the law school at Northwestern University, Chicago, under the caption, "Shall the World Court Be Open to the Public?" call attention to a state of affairs that seems almost unbelievable. The issue involved is the fact that, despite the specific statement in the treaty constituting the World Court that "the hearings in Court shall be public," in reality not only do visitors, desiring to do so, find it impossible to attend these hearings, but the Peace Palace itself is not open to the public at any time when the Court is in session. Moreover, no one seems to know who is responsible for the present rulings or who would have authority to change them. And consequently all indications point to the probability that conditions will continue as they are.

Sam Weller's knowledge of London, it may be recalled, was "extensive and peculiar," and those who are fortunate enough to have the time and opportunity to examine "The London of Dickens" by Walter Dexter will find their knowledge of the City much enlarged thereby, for Dickens wrote only of that concerning which he knew. Mr. Dexter's fifteen rambles carry the reader to almost numberless sites and scenes in the British metropolis, and even the most ardent Dickens enthusiast, who is somewhat familiar with all that the great novelist wrote, will be surprised at the ground covered. No wonder Dickens's "Samivel" knew all about Greater London, for Dickens himself was a positive authority on out-of-the-way

The Odyssey of a Ford

We are climbing the long eight-mile grade leading from Culdesac to the plateau above Mission Cañon, one of the many scenic farming spots in the great State of Idaho—a land of diversified attractions as well as a State sponsoring diversified farming. Below us lie fertile valleys and Below us lie fertile valleys and hills, still richly green from early rains—a refreshing sight following the brown slopes that accompanied the descent of the famous Lewiston grade from the rich wheat district of eastern Washington to the valley of the Lewis and Clark River. Occasionally a car packed with Indians in gay dress passes us, always with the soft purr of a smoothly running motor indicative of a high-priced car, and always with a driver re markable for his courtesy. Our Betsy has an earnest chug, distinct and sure, that no one could mistake for anything except the well-meant hum of a Ford motor.

"Where to?" I questioned. "Indians have many holidays," was the reply. A garage man at the foot of the Culdesac grade gave addi-tional information. "Sometimes it is an Indian stick game," he explained. This stick game is an In-dian gambling game. "Perhaps they are meeting somewhere to plan an outing." he ventured, "or else they are on their way to the camp meet-ing at Mission Hill." Whatever they are planning, their faces are not stolid and indifferent as one is often told in special articles about them, but radiate with happiness, anticipation, satisfaction, and show certain signs of contentment

At the top of the Culdesac grade we come in sight of a farmhouse which stares mildly at us as we approach around the last curve in the grade to first obscure and then re-veal the trail shead. The house is unpretentious and unpainted. ward the rear are grouped the small farm buildings—the barn alone being of sufficient importance to be called a building. "What good is a crop when you can't sell it?" the young wife asks. "If it wasn't for our cows, we'd starve. Cows save a lot of farmers. We take our cream to Winchester and that's about all we have."

Further discussion brings out the fact that this is a farm of 160 acres, cleared of timber and converted into farm land. For five years this young couple have tried farming in this spot and found it unprofitable This year they have a little startnot through their farming success but through the burning of the rural school near them. A most interesting day it is—this first day of our trip through four teen or fifteen states in the circle we are traveling from Washington to Missouri, and back to Washing ton by way of Wisconsin and Mon-tana. We left Spokane, Wash, this morning, passed through the rich farming district of the Palouse country and stopped for lunch at Pullman, the seat of the Washington State Agricultural College, where hundreds of acres of rolling, hilly land are farmed experimentally, the results of these experiments being given to the farmers of the State for their help and guidance. This college very seldom chronicles the word "failure" in its records. It is training annually scores of young men who wish to follow farming as a profession-for these students believe farming is a profession. They believe farming to be in a period of transition from the primeval in some communities to the medieval others, on up to the more modern methods of farming in isolated in-

"How many manufacturing con-cerns succeed?" asked one of these students. He answered his own students. He answered his question. "One out of seventeen." and went off whistling, evidently seventeen who try farming succeed, he will be that one.

"Breakfast is ready!" Almost before we know it, the light of early morning is pouring in. Another day is before us. We dress hastily, for the breakfast summons is imperatively cheerful. However, even in process of dressing we are able to notice several objects that we did nearest me is a print of "The First Step," by Millet, clipped from a magazine. But they fixed the price and Lobody could make much because they didn't fix the price on anything we had to have." A more serious topic has now opened and is being discussed between husband and wife. The United States and the League

By STANLEY HIGH

GENEVA, July 3-Here in Geneva was lost in Japan at that time. "Now one fears for the myth of American isolation. Congress or the President of the United States has no reprethe Japanese people," he said, "are again swinging to the League, viewing this as the time to aid the League's growth. The argument against the League that, more frequently than any other is heard in Europe is the fact of the absence of the United States. Responsible German leaders. I was told here, argue against German mem-bership in the League, even today, on the ground that it would be displeasing to the United States. Thus, the most desirable developments in field of international settlement are being delayed because of the nega-tive influence of the policy of the United States.

How much longer this isolation can be called by that name, in the face of impending international ques-tions in which the United States is certain to be concerned, is difficult to say. There is a good deal of discussion here of the land disarmament conference which President Coolidge is expected to call, if he is elected. Disarmament, it is pointed out, is a political as well as an economic problem. The success of the Washington Conference is attributed, to a great extent, to the fact that it considered political questions in the Far East and recognized the neces-sity of their solution as a basis for a reduction in military equipment. Observers of the European situa-tion declare that, much more than was the case in the Far East, a reduction of land armaments here in some of those problems are solved. facts assert, to talk about reducing the size of Europe's military ma-The United States, however, while asserting its desire to lead in the discussion of general reduction of land armaments, is officially committed against any entrance into the field of European politics. Just how and the other so-called peril sidestepped is a question which will require the most adroit statesmanship to solve. The United States, say many of those in the League who have been studying the disarmament problem, will be obliged either to abandon its program for disarmaments, or to accept, definitely, a position at the political council tables of Europe. And the particular table around which these problems will probably find their final working out is located in Geneva. It is with the League of therefore, that the United according to present indications, will, sooner or later, find itself in full co-operation, unless the American people are willing to abandon their place in world affairs.

Drink and the Olympics To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

During the Olympic sports in Paris, the general public was kept informed that prohibition America and prohibition Finland were carrying off the chief prizes. The final national placing was as follows: America, 255; Finland, 166; Great Britain, 851/2, and France, 261/2. It has been declared by competi-tors of the first two nations that the irinking of alcoholic liquors is fatal to athletes. often heard about managers who refused to permit any kind of alco-holic liquors to those whom they were training.

Later in life I came to discover that champions in walking, running, rowing, shooting, cricket and other sports were either total abstainers or refused to drink intoxicating liquors while in training. If the arduous task of winning the world's championships can be done of the everyday world would be more easily and better performed if car-ried out on the same theory. GUY HAYLER, President, World

"A Vital American Problem" To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

Having read with such keen interest the article entitled "A Vital American Problem" in the Monitor of July 18, I wish to say that I am heartily in favor of the plan.

There is a great need of getting the American people out to vote. The small percentage who take advantage of their right is a disgrace and it always seems to me that those who have not voted are the ones most critical of the political situation which arises from their individual neglect.
